Cape Breton Lobster Fishery.

The lobster fishing along the Cape Breton coast will this season show a marked decrease over previous years. Fishermen are at a loss to discover this and attribute the falling off to the fact that the lobster has migrated from the shores to deeper water. This branch of the fisheries this year, however, shows remarkable results along the northern coast of New Brunswick; along the Westmoreland coast the fishermen have made almost phenomenal catches. Many fishermen averaged $100 per day while one man in five days caught five tons of lobsters which netted him $360.
